Baseball is played on a diamond-shaped field, with four bases on the corners. The fielding team positions players in different areas, such as the pitcher's mound, the infield, and the outfield. The batting team tries to hit the pitcher's thrown balls and advance around the bases, while the fielding team attempts to prevent this by catching the ball and making outs.

The Basics of Gameplay

Let's dive deeper into the various aspects of baseball gameplay:

1. Batting

Batting is when a player of the batting team tries to hit the ball thrown by the pitcher. The batter must hit the ball within the designated fair territory. If the batter successfully hits the ball and reaches a base safely, they can continue to run bases until they are tagged out or reached home plate.

2. Pitching

Pitching is the act of throwing the ball by the pitcher from the pitcher's mound towards the batter. The pitcher aims to deliver the ball within the designated strike zone, while also attempting to deceive the batter and prevent hits.

3. Fielding

Fielding involves the players of the fielding team attempting to catch the ball and get the batter out or restrict their movement on the bases. The different positions on the field, such as the pitcher, catcher, infielders, and outfielders, have specific roles and responsibilities in fielding.

4. Scoring

The primary objective of baseball is to score runs. A player can score by hitting the ball and safely reaching home plate after touching all three bases (first, second, and third) in order. Scoring runs while the bases are occupied by other teammates results in additional runs being added to the total score.
