The first significant milestone was the establishment of the Cicero Flying Field, a rudimentary airfield that served as the birthplace of Chicago's aviation industry. Michael Haupt, an esteemed aviation historian, vividly recounts the challenges faced by these early aviators as they navigated the uncharted territory of flight.

The Golden Era of Aviation: Rise of Commercial Airlines

With the advancement of technology, Chicago witnessed a transformative era in aviation during the 1920s. Michael Haupt expertly delves into the stories of legendary aviators like Amelia Earhart and Charles Lindbergh, who captivated audiences with their daring feats.

Additionally, Haupt takes us back to the momentous occasion when Chicago's own Midway Airport, then known as Chicago Municipal Airport, opened its doors to commercial flights. This marked a pivotal point in the city's aviation history, forever connecting Chicago to the rest of the world.

World War II: Chicago Takes Flight

As the world plunged into the chaos of World War II, Chicago emerged as a vital hub for the war effort. Michael Haupt uncovers the significant role played by Chicago's airports, including O'Hare International Airport (formerly Orchard Field), in supporting military operations.

The transformation of airports into military training centers and the construction of warplanes provided a glimpse into the city's commitment to the war effort. Haupt's in-depth research highlights the exceptional contributions made by Chicago's aviation community during this tumultuous period.

A Modern Metropolis in the Sky: Chicago's Future in Aviation

Today, Chicago stands as a global aviation hub, boasting some of the busiest airports in the world. Michael Haupt, with his vast knowledge and expertise, looks towards the future and discusses the challenges and opportunities that lie ahead for this thriving industry.

Main attractions for visitors include the stunning architecture of O'Hare's iconic Terminal 2, the state-of-the-art control towers overlooking the Chicago skyline, and the awe-inspiring air shows that take place annually.

Aviation Chicago Timeline traces the pivotal role that Chicago played in the development of aviation in the United States. Long before the Wright Brothers took to the air, Chicago had an active balloon community and Octave Chanute was providing the latest aviation research to scores of experimenters. In the 1910s, the city was bustling with flight schools, airplane manufacturers, air shows, and aviation developers. By the 1920s, Chicago was the core of the U.S. air mail system and easily transitioned into a major air passenger hub. Throughout its history, Chicago has produced leaders who shaped U.S. aviation policy including Benjamin Lipsner (the first Superintendent of Aerial Mail of the Post Office Dept.), Daniel McCracken (major designer of the Air Commerce Act of 1926 and the the first Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aviation), and Samuel Skinner (Secretary of Transportation under Pres. George H.W. Bush).

Aviation Chicago Timeline offers a fascinating account of over 1,000 events documenting the development of aviation. The author, Michael Haupt, provides a series of well-written stories that portray Chicago's gripping aviation history in an inviting and interesting fashion. Haupt's meticulous research, attention to detail, and exhaustive notes make this book an essential tool for everyone interested in the history of aviation in this country.
