Time stands still for no one! Plus time tends to erase or alter memories unless recorded in print or captured on a photo. Therefore, I dedicate this sampling of personal memorable moments so future generations might get a glimpse of what living in the Wisconsin Northwoods was like as viewed through the eyes of someone who dearly loved living a lifetime in a four-season paradise.

Much of what this book includes has been published in the Lakeland Times, a newspaper based in Minocqua, Wisconsin. In addition to the selections I've included in this book, I've added a smattering of original poetry which I've penned over many, many years.

So, dig in... experience the wonders of living in a truly magnificent "Four Season" environment provided so tastefully and eloquently by Ma Nature for folks of all ages to enjoy!

Leon "Buckshot" Anderson has been a resident of St. Germain, Wisconsin for the past seventy-three years. He spent his early years living with his parents and a black Cocker Spaniel in a three-room log cabin at Kasomo Lake. It was here he received his basic education of "living off the land" during the crushing hard times that were a result of the lingering Great Depression.

Buckshot began a summer career guiding anglers in 1951 at age fourteen and continues in that occupation at the present. He has logged and recorded over 5000 days on the water in his daily fishing diary, and was inducted into the National Freshwater Fishing Hall of Fame in 2001 as a Legendary Guide.

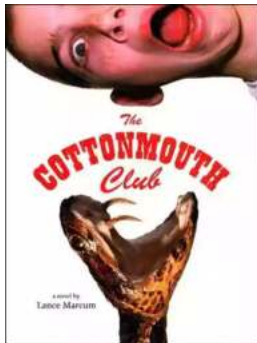

Buckshot is author to eight other non-fiction books, including the bestseller, 60 Years Between the Oars, and a fictional outdoor thriller trilogy
