

Geese Police On Patrol: Lynda Bulla

Geese can be charming creatures when observed from a distance, gracefully gliding over a serene lake. However, when these feathered friends start encroaching on urban landscapes, they can quickly become a nuisance. That's where Geese Police On Patrol and their dedicated founder, Lynda Bulla, come in.

The Rise of Geese in Urban Spaces

In recent years, city parks, golf courses, and other urban areas have experienced a surge in the population of Canada geese. These beautiful birds, known for their striking black necks and white chins, have adapted well to urban environments, finding an abundance of food, water, and shelter. Unfortunately, their presence often leads to a range of issues, including property damage, unsightly droppings, aggressive behavior, and potential health hazards.

Serve and protect is the motto most police live by. And the geese, police on Harrow's farm, are no exception—catching thieves, finding the lost, responding to emergencies, controlling unruly mobs and solving mysteries.

Their sage advice brings comfort in times of distress, and gratitude from the receiver of their gentle care. Although the inhabitants are all different, their only connection is their home; they all work together to honor their heroes.
