An adventure story of Johnny Bidler's summer working as a carnival barker and his discoveries regarding abusive people. Just after he graduates high school in May, 1965, he finds work helping set up booths for a carnival at his local fairgrounds.

Mabel Morgan, who owns one-third of the show, introduces Johnny to several game owners, including Max Thompson. She takes him under her wing, helps him learn the language of the carnival, and advises him regarding pay and proper procedures.

Max Thompson, the last man for whom Johnny works, asks him to work as an agent in the milk-bottle joint for the week the carnival is in town. Johnny's need for college money causes him to agree to work for Max. During the week that he works the milk-bottle booth, Max asks him to consider working the game through the summer.

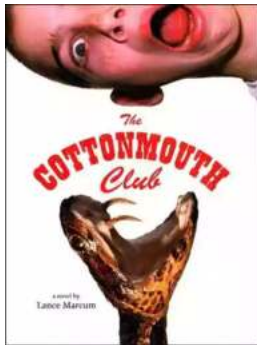

While Johnny is driving home from helping set up the carnival, he hears a radio news report that says the Vietnam Conflict is escalating and that causes him to worry about getting drafted before he can get a student deferment. Max and Johnny build a tip-up-beer-bottle joint - the alibi store. Through the summer, they have continuous disputes regarding the beer-bottle game and pay. Johnny objects to working the alibi store because unless allowed to win, players always lose. Max always has to be prompted to pay Johnny the money he has earned. The Alibi Store illustrates how one young man chooses to stop the abusive treatment he receives from his father and his boss. In the process of dealing with these problems, Johnny discovers that the only constant in life is change.
